Students get to process mock crime scene

WALLINGFORD - Students at Holy Trinity will get a first-hand look this morning on how to process a crime scene, including use of the Connecticut Major Police Crime Squad van.

The school, located at 11 N. Whittlesley Ave., will host a special mock murder mystery this morning to give students a chance to learn what police look for, how to identify potential evidence and how to process the scene said Brian Leslie, an attorney who helped establish the program for the school.

"We will bring the kids out and let them take a look as if a murder had just taken place," Leslie said. "The students will then process the scene and the evidence they find will be used during an interactive mock trial during Catholic Schools week in January."
